Termites

by Dennis Lange

Termites. They eat wood, chewing up our houses, don't they? Yes, a termite chews the wood, but cannot digest it. Within its gut are tiny protozoans that digests the wood for the termite. The termite cannot live without the protozoans and the protozoans cannot live without the termite. Neither could have evolved without the other being in existence at the same time and the same place. Thus, evolution is false. They were created at the same time, for each other.

Ps.24:1 The earth is the Lord's and all it contains.
